The view of Whitevale, Township of Pickering, was chosen to illustrate Canadian industry in 1871. At this time, a high proportion of manufacturing activity was still located in small settlements, some of which were growing rapidly into towns. Lovell's Directory (1871) described Whitevale as:

A thriving village...[with] extensive flouring and woollen mills... Montreal Telegraph Co has an office here. Distant from Whitby, the county town, and a station of the Grand Trunk Railway, 13 miles. Mail daily. Population about 250.

Truman P. White has acquired the water rights at Majorville on Duffin's Creek in 1845 and developed a grist mill, a saw mill and, later, a woollen mill. By 1871 the census enumerated six significant industrial establishments employing 66 workers and with a total value of production amounting to $125,000. The transition from waterwheels (70 horsepower) to steam engines (66 horsepower) was already apparent in the village by this date. In common with its counterparts across the country, Whitevale's basic industrial activities were closely associated with the local agricultural area. There was also considerable economic integration apparent in the ownership of several establishments by Truman P. White and in the making of staves in the sawmill for the cooper shop which in turn supplied the flour mill with basic containers for transporting the flour to market.

Unlike many of its contemporaries, Whitevale has remained about the same size ever since 1871. The 1971 census recorded a population of only 273 in the unincorporated settlement. Whitevale never achieved connection by railway, county road or provincial highway. Much of the surrounding land was acquired for the planned Pickering airport and new town in 1972/3 and today the settlement is threatened by the creation of a municipal solid waste dump for Metropolitan Toronto and the Durham Region.

The illustration was first published in the Illustrated Historical Atlas of the County of Ontario (Toronto: J.H. Bees and Co., 1877), reprinted Ross Cumming, 1972).

CANADIAN INDUSTRY IN 1871 (CANIND71) PROJECT

Between 1982 and 1990, a project based in the Department of Geography, University of Guelph, has made machine-readable the full data for some 45,000 industrial firms that were enumerated in Canada's first national census in 1871. A uniquely valuable source is thus becoming accessible to scholars and researchers in several disciplines. The 1871 schedules contain a wealth of information which was not published at the time or later. Although similar details were collected in the censuses of 1881, 1891, 1901 and 1911, none of the manuscript schedules for those years have survived. The CANIND71 database has great significance in being a detailed "snapshot" of industrial activity just after Confederation, at a time of transition in industrial technology, business organization and work discipline. The records include examples of all kinds of industrial work environments from mills and artisanal craftshops in mainly rural settings to factories, manufactories and sweatshops in the growing towns and cities.

The CANIND71 project is important for its methodological experience in handling large quantities of historical data and making them accessible to users. Relevant aspects include the total coverage of all establishments and all variables recorded in the original source and our dedication to making the material available to others in a variety of software environments and with full explanation of the source and methodology. As well as the data for each establishment, we have added precise geographical references and Standard Industrial Classification codes (SIC) for all establishments, which permit both the retrieval of details for individual businesses and their systematic aggregation by industry type or geographical area.

Completion of the CANIND71 database has been assisted by several grants from the Social Sciences and Humanities Research Council of Canada between 1985 and 1990. The most substantial of these were Grants 482-87-0010 and 482-88-0010 to Elizabeth Bloomfield as principal investigator, in the Strategic Grants Program: Women and Work Theme. These grants, totalling $114,000, supported the most intensive phase of database creation in 1988 and 1989. Other SSHRC grants to Elizabeth Bloomfield (principal) in 1985 and to Kris Inwood (principal) in 1988 have also helped. In addition, smaller grants from the University of Guelph to Gerald Bloomfield and Kris Inwood have supported the project for short periods. Personal funds have also been necessary. Some preliminary activity on the Maritime data during 1986 was helped by a grant from St Mary's University, Halifax, to Professor Inwood and Professor John Chamard. Systematic reconstruction and digitizing of the boundaries of 1871 census units has been made possible by SSHRC Research Grant 410-89-0099 to Gerald Bloomfield (principal).

The officials responsible for the original 1871 Census of Canada believed that the information they collected and collated was "as accurate as is humanly possible." In our turn, we are devoting twelve months in 1989-1990 to rigorously checking and editing the SAS datasets for Ontario, the Maritimes and Quebec on the mainframe computer. We are also preparing a manual documenting the database in both English and French. We expect that the final version of the whole database will be available for others to use from January 1991. Those interested in obtaining the whole database or partial datasets should contact Dr Elizabeth Bloomfield, C/- Department of Geography, University of Guelph, Guelph, Ontario, N1G 2W1, after September 1990.

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

The interest and support of all who have assisted with this project are gratefully acknowledged. Janine Grant, Barbara Sibley, Jane Turner and Stephen Bellinger worked for the project for significant periods and the quality of the final database and documentation owes much to their careful and thorough work. Larry Laliberté has created the computer maps. Peter McCaskell, first as programmer-analyst in the Department of Geography and then from Computing Services, has helped substantially with database management and programming through all phases of the project. We appreciate the shelter provided to this project by the Department of Geography, University of Guelph throughout the 1980s. We are also grateful to the Social Sciences and Humanities Research Council of Canada: Strategic Grants Program and Research Grants Program for its generous financial assistance during 1988, 1989 and 1990 which has enabled us to complete the CANIND71 database.

I ONTARIO CENTRAL PLACES IN 1871: AN INTRODUCTION

G.T. Bloomfield

The returns of industrial establishments are to be recorded in the District, Sub-District and Division where the Enumerator finds the establishment, and nowhere else. This principle is essential in every case. The production is attached to the locality.

(Instructions to Census Officers 1871).¹

While the principle of attaching production to the locality was clearly important to the organizers of the 1871 Census, the spatial information gathered by the enumerators and presented in the reports has several limitations. Our reconstruction of the industrial census has been able to place all establishments within the framework of the Census Districts (CDs) and the Census Sub-Districts (CSDs) but the finer details of location were generally not recorded. No details of the boundaries of Census Enumerators' Divisions (CEDs) have survived.² Only a few of the manuscript census schedules include details of the precise location or address of the industrial establishments.³

Many difficulties arise, therefore, in attempting to attach the production to the locality when only the CSD is directly presented in the Census. Census Sub-Districts with industrial establishments arranged in size from 0.18 sq. miles in London's Ward No. 1 (#10A) to 6,900 sq. miles in Spanish River (#88B).⁴ Pinpointing the precise location of industrial establishments is comparatively straightforward in the incorporated urban centres, where the areas were clearly defined and business directories have survived. Beyond the urban areas the task of locating industrial establishments is much more difficult. In Wellington County, for example, the average size of the 14 rural CSDs was 90 sq. miles, each with an average of 34 industrial establishments.

This report has been designed to identify places within the framework of the 1871 census structure of CDs and CSDs. Researchers in local areas may, with the aid of directories and similar sources, be able to locate establishments

² See G.T. Bloomfield, Boundaries of Canadian Census Units in 1871, #10 in this series, p. 10.

³ Of the 21,729 establishments in Ontario, only 62 of the entries in the schedules included an address or location. Such details were usually given in the "comments: section of the schedule. In Toronto, for example, only 8 of the 565 establishments were given a street address, but even in these cases no building number was provided.

⁴ There were 31 establishments in CSD 10A, only 3 in CSD 88B.

more precisely by locality. Whitevale, Pickering Township, Ontario County (used as the cover illustration for this report) was one of 17 places or localities in CSD 48A, Pickering Township, which included 132 industrial establishments. None of the original manuscript data identified the precise location of the establishments within the township. With the aid of Lovell's Canadian Dominion Directory 1871, six establishments could be located in Whitevale. Further use of this directory could place most of the other establishments within the appropriate locality. Since most industrial activities tended to be found in clusters of population, the use of similar sources at the local scale should make it possible to locate most of the establishments. The most difficult establishments to locate are likely to be small ephemeral sawmills and activities centred on farms.

Significance of place and space

Place is much more than a location or a geographical identifier. In the words of David Daiches:

The fact that a sense of place plays a profound part in the emotional structure of most people, not only writers, and the various ways in which that sense can be reorganized, developed, related to other kinds of awareness, and in general cultivated, can help to make our lives more interesting.⁵

Industry in 1871 was shaped by the characteristics of places. The existence of water-power sites was an important locational determinant but the qualities of people were even more significant in shaping the development of manufacturing. Places were also distinguished from each other by the nature of industry. Flour mills and saw mills shaped the distinctiveness of smaller places. Larger places were often distinguished by particular industrial specializations. Gananoque and Napanee were similar in general size, but the substantial differences in their industrial structures called for different attributes and skills in the labour force. Differences in the workplace contributed to the varied sights, sounds and smells of such industrial places.⁶

⁵ D. Daiches & J. Flower, Literary Landscapes of the British Isles: A Narrative Atlas (London: Paddington Press, 1979) p. 7.

⁶ The differences between the two towns can be illustrated as follows:

	Gananoque	Napanee
Population	2,967	2,020
No. of Establishments	50	62
No. of employed in industry	419	383
No. employed in wood industry	39	85
% employed in wood industry	9.3	22.2
No. employed in metal industries	314	86
% employed in metal industries	74.9	22.4

The more varied industrial structure of Napanee may be partly attributed to its role as a market centre and county town. In the absence of any primary metal production, Gananoque's distinctive structure can only be explained by the special efforts of local entrepreneurs.

At the broader scale, places are aggregated together in space - a quality of area which can be abstract or have tangible expression in defined territories, physical regions or functional zones of influence.⁷ The nature, resources and relative location of the Ottawa Valley and its southern tributaries, the Madawaska, Mississippi and Rideau Rivers, for example, provided a distinctive sense of coherence largely missing in other areas. Industry, in varied forms, made a contribution to regional differences in 1871 but the discovery of the subtle variations across the province awaits a multifaceted research approach.

The rich variety of places in the Ontario landscape in 1871 is expressed in their names. A distinct name identified each place and helped to define the physical entity and the social and business community existing at the time. While the general characteristics of Whitevale (illustrated on the cover) were similar to dozens of places of a similar size, its name and location were distinctive and unique.

This study has identified 2,066 places in Ontario that were noted in contemporary sources in 1871, while another 898 alternate, earlier or later names are also listed in the index and notes. While some of the names had grand or official origins,⁸ such as Kingston, London or the surviving county names of Simcoe's plan, most of the place names had local roots. Physical features (e.g. Sandhill, Peel; Marble Rock, Lanark; Floodtown, Oxford; Pine Grove, York) or proprietary names (e.g. Dickinson's Landing, Stormont; McQuade's Corners, Durham; Walkerville, Essex) were the most common. Many names frequently showed the industrial origins of places. Reference to the index provides a list of 44 places with "mill" in the place name.⁹ Durham Forges (Oxford), Furnace Falls (Leeds), Petrolia (Lambton), Tannery (Lanark), Limehouse (Halton), Terra Cotta (Peel) and Bruce Mines (Algoma) clearly express some industrial origins.

Some of the names illustrate the aspirations of local residents. Dollar (York), Enterprise (Addington), Harmony, (Perth), Prospect (Lanark), Progresstown (Wentworth), Temperanceville (Welland & Elgin) and Utopia (Simcoe) are perhaps expressions of hope rather than contemporary realities.

⁹ If the secondary names (former or alternate names) are included, the number rises to 89 places.

Virtually every example of toponymy can be discovered in the list, including the occasional anagram such as Numogate (Montague Township, Lanark).

The fluidity of place names was an expression of both fashion and immediate practical needs, as well as physical and functional change. Many well-established places in 1871 had complex earlier origins, often as rival land subdivisions or functional nodes at a similar location. Ayr, Waterloo was named in 1840 to recognize the coalescence of the three settlements of Mudge's Mills (1824) Jedburgh (1832) and Nithvale.¹⁰ Detailed examination of the notes illustrates the trend, already apparent by 1871, to move away from the prosaic functional names to something grander. Buzztown in Frontenac County became Verona; Farmersville in Leeds County became Athens; Five Stakes in Elgin County was renamed Talbotville Royal; Ragtown in Brant County became Victoria; Sheepskin Corners in Middlesex County was changed to Fernhill; and Tuptown in Peel County became Belfountain.

Changes of place names also reflected a quickening of the pace of modernization as urban development expanded, fostered by economic growth and railways. While some of the older names such as Centreville and the common suffixes of corners, crossings and landings implied a degree of isolation, newer names such as Lobo Station (Middlesex), Oil Springs (Lambton), Prescott Junction (Grenville) and Suspension Bridge (Welland) suggested new technology, resource extraction and longer distance connections.

While the population of southern Ontario was widely distributed there were substantial variations in densities from the average of 42 persons per square mile. A cross section of territory from Toronto along the Sydenham Road to the Bruce Peninsula showed a rapid decline in density from 6,030 in the City of Toronto to 65 persons per sq. mile in Etobicoke Township, 29 persons per sq. mile in Holland Township, Grey County and only 34 persons on the fringe of settlement in Albemarle and Eastnor Townships.¹¹ But low population densities on the periphery of settlement and long distances across Ontario did not mean total isolation. There were over 1,700 post offices in Ontario in October 1870 and few households or businesses were more than five miles from a post office outlet. Information and news was disseminated by about 190 weekly newspapers published in 128 places. Urgent messages could be transmitted and received from the 272 Ontario offices of the Montreal Telegraph Company. A basic railway network connected most of the larger urban centres and, incidentally many smaller places. By mid-1870 the Ontario railway network covered 1,422 miles and served about 227 stations. During the decade of the 1870s the provincial network was more than doubled in length.¹²

¹⁰ A. Taylor, Our Todays and Yesterdays (Ayr: North Dumfries & Ayr Centennial Committee, 1967).

¹¹ Population densities calculated from the census data in Report #10 in this series.

¹² Details from Lovell's Canadian Dominion Directory 1871 and E. & G. Bloomfield, Urban Growth and Local Services: The Development of Ontario Municipalities to 1981 (Guelph: University of Guelph, Department of Geography,

In the absence of detailed studies of late nineteenth-century accessibility, it is difficult to gain a full sense of the time, cost and distance relationships between places. One example illustrates the transformation of speed of journey times for passengers and mail. Until 1871, the journey from Walkerton, county town of Bruce, to Toronto involved the use of mail stages to Kincardine and then to Goderich. Trains from Goderich connected with Toronto services at Stratford. Since the mail train departed from Goderich at 6:30 a.m., an overnight stay was required. The total journey time was about 36 hours. When the Toronto, Grey & Bruce line to Mount Forest was completed in 1871 the journey time was reduced to 12-14 hours. A year later, when the Wellington Grey & Bruce Railway reached Walkerton, the Toronto journey could be accomplished in 6-8 hours. Later improvements reduced the time to about 4 1/2 hours.¹³

Defining geographical space in 1871

Ontario's geographical space, especially in the absence of major physical features, was largely defined in terms of property boundaries, land survey units and areas used for municipal and legal purposes. These spatial elements were arranged hierarchically from the small areas to the largest - the area of the province. Individual perception of space tended to vary from a precise knowledge at the immediate local scale to a hazy identification of distant areas. The limited availability of detailed maps at this time was a distinct deterrent to the acquisition of geographical knowledge outside a small group of people.¹⁴

Property boundaries, namely farm lots and building lots in settlements, provided the most basic definition of space at the local scale. The 1871 census, in two tabulations, attempted to record the numbers of owners. In rural areas there were 172,258 occupiers of land and there were a further 178,126 occupiers of town and village lots.¹⁵ Data in these census tabulations show Occasional Papers Series No. 3, 1983).

¹³ Details calculated from railway timetables. Relative costs have declined significantly. In 1871 a ten word telegraph message from Walkerton cost 25 cents (16.7 percent of the annual subscription to the Bruce Herald). In 1990 a one minute telephone call only amounted to 1.7 percent of the subscription to the local Herald Times. The cost reduction was even more evident over longer distances.

¹⁴ The publication of historical county atlases in the later 1870s helped to open up new vistas for all readers. See: B. May, County Atlases of Canada: A Descriptive Catalogue (Ottawa: Public Archives of Canada, 1970). Most of the Atlases were reprinted in the 1970s.

¹⁵ Rural occupiers, recorded by CSD, were further subdivided by owners (144,212), tenants (27,340) and employees (2,706). Town and village lots were only recorded by CD. Toronto (#46 and 47) had 14,965 occupiers while Algoma West (#90) had only 55 occupiers of town and village lots. See: Census 1871, Report Vol 3, Tables XX and XXI.

that there were many more occupiers of land than the theoretical land subdivision might suggest. In Eramosa Township, Wellington County, the basic survey suggested only 224 lots of 200 acres (7 concessions X 32 lots in each), whereas the actual number of occupiers numbered 416 in the census.

For most rural residents, the school section was probably the best known area beyond the environs of the farm. In 1871 there were 4,815 school sections throughout the province and all but 358 of these were located in rural areas, outside cities, towns and villages.¹⁶ Eramosa Township, Wellington County had nine school sections at this time. The huge number of school sections reflected not only the high proportion of the population living in rural areas but the decentralized location of the rural population. In the towns and cities, the wards provided a basic element of identity within the larger urban place.

Throughout Ontario, the township was the basis for the arrangement of larger spatial units and was the most localized area of municipal government. By 1871 practically all the geographic (or land survey) townships of southern Ontario had been laid out.¹⁷ In the more settled areas the townships were incorporated as municipalities; in the fringe zones several geographic townships were often united as a single municipal township. Northern Bruce County had two such examples, and #58G in North Peterborough County comprised six geographic townships. Most of the school sections were subdivisions of townships, the 273 divisional courts were also defined in terms of township boundaries, as were the counties and electoral districts.

Counties have always been the most important middle-scale areas for defining space. In 1871 there were 42 geographic counties and 36 municipal counties. The difference between the two types was the existence of five united counties (Northumberland Durham; Lennox & Addington; Leeds & Grenville; Stormont, Dundas & Glengarry and Prescott & Russell). All counties were agglomerations of townships and incorporated urban places. Municipal counties did not have jurisdiction over the cities and separated towns within their boundaries.¹⁸

The boundaries of the geographic and municipal counties of 1871 are shown in Figure 1. Since counties ranged in size from 269 sq. miles (Peel) to 2,389 sq. miles (Renfrew) and varied greatly in population density, the electoral counties (or districts) were often substantially different from the geographic counties. In 1871 there were 82 Provincial and Federal Electoral Districts.¹⁹ A further source of confusion was between judicial counties and municipal counties. In the case of Simcoe County much of the territory of Muskoka, Parry Sound and western Nipissing was part of the judicial county, and the Simcoe County Council had to bear the costs of the administration of justice although no revenue was received from the outlying unorganized territories.²⁰ Details of the geographic counties and the census districts of 1871 are set out in Table 2 at the end of this introduction.

¹⁷ The general chronology of township surveys is presented on Plate 99, Ontario Economic Atlas (1969). By the end of 1869 some 455 townships had been surveyed in the "Counties Area" out of the final total of 466.

Northern Ontario (CDs #83-90) was still virtually unsettled in 1871. The enumerated population of 15,728 represented only 0.97 percent of the provincial population. Some districts had been defined by the time of the census, namely Muskoka and Parry Sound, but the distinctions between Algoma and Nipissing districts were still vague. District boundaries and the judicial administration in northern Ontario were not clarified until the late 1880s.

In 1871 the Province of Ontario covered some 101,715 sq. miles²¹ and had a population of 1,620,851. The southern limits of the province were clearly defined by the lake shorelines, the St. Clair, Detroit, Niagara, St. Lawrence and Ottawa rivers. In the north the boundary was defined by the watershed or height of the land between the Great Lakes and Hudson Bay drainage systems. These outer limits were basically established by the Treaty of Paris 1763 and sustained by subsequent legislation to Confederation.

While most of the areas and boundaries at the finer geographical scales have remained relatively stable up to the present, the total area of the province was extended very substantially after 1871. Indeed the 1871 area of Ontario was only 28 percent of its final area. Major northern and north western extensions took place in the 1870s and 1880s and again in 1912 when the District of Patricia was transferred to Ontario.²²

Significant changes to the map of counties took place in 1874 with the formation of the provisional county of Haliburton and in 1881 when Dufferin was established. No major changes took place until the period of regional government formation in 1969-1974. Reorganization of townships has been limited to counties or districts with regional government and Oxford County which restructured its internal areas in 1975. Many of the other areas have been transformed. School sections finally disappeared in the 1960s, divisional courts have been reorganized, and most urban municipal boundaries have been extended to annex new territory for growth.

The basic similarities of areas and boundaries between 1871 and the present day reflects the general maturity of the system as established by 1871. Relationships between the land survey systems and other types of areas were clearly established in Ontario by the time of the first census of Canada. The arrangement of lot, concession, township and county was firmly imprinted on the landscape and clearly differentiated geographical space in Ontario from Quebec as well as from the neighbouring American states.

Defining places in 1871

If geographical spaces were mostly defined in formal legal terms, places were generally expressed and experienced in functional terms. While most of the ideas of settlement systems were only formulated and clarified in the mid twentieth century, all the practical aspects of a complex settlement hierarchy had been recognized long before. The significance of population size, the spatial clustering of economic activities, the terminology of places - village, town and city, and various administrative practices of organizations such as the Post Office all implicitly or explicitly show a recognition of an hierarchy of places.

By 1871, southern Ontario had a well established settlement system. At the local scale, there were hundreds of small places with populations of fewer than 250 inhabitants. Such places provided the basic connections between farms and rural industrial establishments with the larger region and world beyond the local area. A post office usually combined with a store provided the communication and commercial linkages, while a school house and churches gave a sense of social cohesion to the local community. Economic activities centred around a blacksmith, flour/grist mill, saw mills and other types of small workshops. In physical terms, the buildings of the smaller centres might be clustered around the nucleus of a crossroads or a water-powered mill site or, in the very smallest examples, could be dispersed along a concession road with the functions being a mile or so apart.

The imprecise nature of the smallest centres of the settlement hierarchy was reflected in the terminology of the time. While later studies of settlement systems have used the term "hamlet" to describe the smallest places, this term does not appear to have been used in Ontario in the 1870s.²³ Lovell's Canadian Dominion Directory described places under 250 population as "small village", "small place" or in some instances "post office station". The absence of consistency in contemporary terminology reflects a sense of fluidity - some places were growing, others stable but might grow again, a few already overshadowed by bigger neighbouring centres.

All the smaller places were connected by road or water with larger centres which contained a broader range of services. Villages ranged in population size from 250 to 2,000; some were incorporated, others not. Many villages had post offices of an higher order which could issue and cash money orders, an office of the Montreal Telegraph Company, small merchants and more industrial establishments. The use of the term "town" was generally confined to places with the formal incorporated status of town. In functional terms, most of the places with over 500 population might be regarded as towns since they included functions such as newspapers, some form of banking and transportation and communication linkages with larger areas.²⁴

Table 1 presents summary data derived from the main tabulation of this report. There was a general symmetry of places at the upper end of the hierarchy. Toronto (population 56,092) was over twice the size of Hamilton (26,716). The three other cities ranged in size from Ottawa (21,545) to London (15,826) and Kingston (12,407). Seven towns - Chatham, Brantford, St Catharines, Guelph, Port Hope, Belleville and Brockville, had populations in excess of 5,000. All the larger centres had achieved incorporated status by 1871. For the 213 smaller places, between 500 and 2,500 population, only one-third had become incorporated by 1871 although many would become incorporated during the next decade.²⁵

²⁵ See: Bloomfield and Bloomfield, Urban Growth and Local Services (1983).

While the settlement system of southern Ontario was well established, that of the north was still very rudimentary. Bruce Mines, with an estimated population of 1,250, was the largest place. Gravenhurst and Muskoka had populations around 400. Fort William, the most westerly settlement in the province, had an estimated population of only 70.

Urbanization as a process was clearly well established in southern Ontario by 1871. At this time the 110 incorporated places had a population of 354,985 or 21.9 percent of the provincial total. If the other 139 places with over 500 population are included, the "urban" population is increased to 460,064 or 28.4 percent of the total. Preliminary geographical analysis of the 1871 industrial census data suggests that a significant proportion of industrial activity was concentrated in urban places.²⁶ The very small places, however, should not be overlooked since some very large establishments could be found there.²⁷ Hiram Walker's distillery, the second largest industrial firm in Ontario, was located in Walkerville, Essex (# 1J) a place with only 200 inhabitants. Gooderham and Worts' large flour mill was located in Meadowvale, Peel (# 39A). In many cases the growth of industrial establishments was the main factor in the creation of settlements. Examples include Patterson Brothers' agricultural implements at Patterson, York (# 44B) and H.B. and S. Rathbun at Mill Point (later Deseronto), Hastings (# 61B).

Unlike the formal geographical definitions of space which have remained stable over long periods of time, the settlement system has been very dynamic. While the ranking of the largest places has remained high, their ranks have been joined by many new places which have expanded as new economic functions have been added. The wider diffusion of nineteenth century innovations such as the railway resulted in the creation of some totally new urban centres such as Palmerston (incorporated 1875), Midland (1879), Bridgeburg (1895) as well as many places in the north of the province.²⁸

While most of the larger places in 1871 grew in size and became incorporated, some for various reasons failed to change. Four of the places with over 1,000 population never incorporated. Orono, Durham and Carronbrook (later Dublin), Perth declined in size. Le Breton Flats, Carleton and Todmorden, York both became merged in their adjacent cities and generally lost any separate identity. Of the 105 unincorporated places with populations between 500 and 1,000, 46 of these never incorporated. The advantages of a railway, for example, failed to transform Burford, Brant or Rockwood, Wellington into expanding urban centres. Some places took more than half a century before incorporation. Examples include Frankford, Hastings (incorporated 1921); Fonthill, Welland (1922); Bridgeport, Waterloo (1951); Bronte, Halton (1952) and Beachville, Oxford (1962).

Industrial growth and industrial change was a very important force in the differentiation of urban places after 1871. Rural places in the twentieth century were profoundly modified by the effects of technological change in farming and the motor vehicle. The fluidity of the settlement pattern is a reflection of all the complex economic, social, political and technological forces of change.

The Ontario Places 1871 Database

Three primary sources were used to generate the list of places for 1871. Details of the sources for each place are noted in the gazetteer.

R.G. Dun & Co.'s Mercantile Agency Reference Book (D),²⁹ which covered places in Ontario and Quebec, was used to develop a list of 1,423 places. The original purpose of this specialized source was to be a guide to creditworthiness; so individual and business names, the nature of business and an assessment of size and credit rating dominate the place entries. The places were listed in alphabetical order with subsidiary details of county and province. No other information about the places was presented.

Lovell's Canadian Dominion Directory for 1871 (L) was the most comprehensive source used in this compilation.³⁰ While listing the names of "professional and business men", this directory also attempted to cover "other inhabitants" of the places surveyed. Each of the 1,822 places in Ontario was described, with some details of relative location, basic activities and services and a population estimate was given.³¹ Subsidiary tables provided transportation details of how to reach each place.

The preface explained the enormous task of compiling the first comprehensive national directory:

... besides the gratuitous services of many persons who desired to help him, the Publisher had in his almost constant employment between forty and fifty travelling agents, with the requisite complement of horses, sleighs, wagons and open boats, whose especial duty it was to collect information in the more inaccessible and remote towns and hamlets of the interior.³²

³¹ A total of 4,914 places was surveyed across Canada (including Newfoundland and Prince Edward Island), Lovell's Directory, p. 50.

³² Lovell's Directory, pp. 49-50.

The publisher was supported by the Montreal business elite. Mr. Hugh Allan, President of the Montreal Telegraph Co. was a major supporter and the company sent all telegrams requesting information free of charge. The Canadian Express Company delivered the directory to subscribers on "exceedingly liberal terms". The substantial expense of producing the 2,560 page directory was aided by credit of $15,000 from Alexander Buntin & Co. the paper manufacturers and $8,000 from the Montreal Type Foundry for type and printing materials. In the method of preparation and the comprehensive material presented, the Lovell's directory paralleled the first national census as a major compendium of information.

It was recognized at an early stage of this study that the post office was the most universally distributed service throughout the country. A comprehensive listing was discovered in the Canadian Almanac and Repository of Useful Knowledge 1871.³³ Post Offices were distinguished in an hierarchical manner by function. Ordinary post offices (P) received and despatched mail and sold stamps. In larger places the post offices (M) were able to issue and cash money orders in addition to the usual mail services. The highest order of post offices (B) also had the savings bank function. The final tally of post offices in Ontario came to 1,738 (169-B; 207-M, 1,362-P). Clearly the post office and the various modes of transport linking all the offices together in a national and world system was a vital organization for the transmission of news and information.

Each source contributed to the master list of places. Considerable editing was required to ensure that named places in the different sources were in fact the same place. Most of the post offices were located by electoral district, not geographic county, in the original national list. In order to standardize the listing, all the post office locations had to be transposed into county order.

Since the principal aim of locating places was to be able to relate them to the 1871 census areas, each place had to be pinpointed accurately within the appropriate CD and CSD. The larger places were readily located from maps and the Ontario Gazetteer.³⁴ Most small places created major problems and a significant proportion of such centres have disappeared since the 1870s. One example will illustrate the procedure used. Victoria, Brant County was listed in Lovell's directory as: "A small village in the township of Burford, county of Brant. Distant from Cathcart 1 mile, from Princeton, a station of the Great Western railway, 5 miles, fare 50 c. Population about 50."³⁵ The place was not shown on present-day maps nor in the Gazetteer. Reference to the Burford Township map in the Historical Atlas of the County of Brant (1875) showed that Victoria was situated between Cathcart and Burford.³⁶ The locational details were then transposed on to a 1:250,000 map and the appropriate latitude (43° 06') and longitude (80° 30') read off.³⁷ Woodbury, also in Burford Township, a small village with a post office and a population of 160 according to Lovell was not so easily found. Careful use of the 1875 map and the names listed in Lovell showed that Woodbury was not a nucleated settlement but a place on the toll road between Victoria and Princeton and the road between concessions III and IV.

³⁴ Canadian Permanent Committee on Geographical Names, Gazetteer of Ontario (Ottawa: Information Canada, 2nd edition, 1975). The fourth edition, published in 1988, is of very limited value for this type of study, since there are no locational references to township, county or district in the place entries.

³⁵ Lovell's Directory 1871, p. 879.

Many places straddled township lines and, at some crossroads, were divided between four townships. Various sources were used as an attempt to attribute most of the development to one or other of the townships. Examples of such problems are noted in the details of the tabulation. Consultation of the place name and post office history literature often clarified and solved problems very quickly.³⁸ Woodbury, Burford Township was, for example, also known as Force's Corners, a point readily apparent from the 1875 Brant County Atlas where Henry Force, Thos. Force, Wm. Force, Noah Force, Jas. Force and Edward Paling dominated the ownership of lots 12 and 13 in concessions III and IV.

The various components of the PLACES database were rigorously edited at various stages, emphasizing consistency and accuracy. All the latitude and longitude references for each county were checked using the ATLAS*DRAW program. Several aberrations were found at this stage, reflecting confusions over duplicate names in data entry or errors in the official gazetteer references. Figures 1 and 2 illustrate the results of the whole process for the two counties of Waterloo and Wellington in 1871, showing the boundaries of the various census units in Figure 1 and the locations and names of all central places identified in 1871 in Figure 2.

In Part II, the final tabulation of all the 2,066 places is set out alphabetically by geographic county. A population figure is given if known from the Census for incorporated centres, or from Lovell's directory for unincorporated places. Where no population is given, the sources were Dun & Co. or the Post Office

³⁸ Among the expanding list of titles, the following were particularly important:
 F.E. Carter, Place Names of Ontario (London: Phelps Publishing Co., 1984), Ghost and Post Offices of Ontario (Toronto: University of Toronto Press, 1986).
 R.C. Smith, Ontario Post Offices, Vol. 1 (Toronto: Unitrade Press, 1988).
 P.J. Roulston, Place Names of Peel: Past and Present (Cheltenham: Boston Mills Press, 1978) was invaluable for tracing the elusive locations of Frogmore and Harris's Corners in Toronto Township (now Mississauga).

list. Each place is located by its Census Sub District (CSD) and by latitude and longitude. The original sources are noted in separate columns. Alternative, former and later names of many places are included as notes. At the end of each county list, alternate place names are given, with reference to the 1871 place name in the main listing. Figure 3 shows the location of all geographic counties in 1871.

In Part III, all places identified for 1871 in contemporary sources are listed according to their location within the 1871 Census Districts and Census Sub-Districts, beginning with Census District #1, Essex, in southwestern Ontario. Figure 3 shows the boundaries of all 1871 Census Districts in Ontario. Part III consists of a full index of all places with their geographic county locations. Primary entries are noted in capitals while 898 alternative names, earlier or later names are shown in lower case type.

It is expected that this report will have several uses, directly with the CANIND71 project, and perhaps more generally for Ontario studies of the period around 1871. The study of places can be valuable in tracing major industrial establishments in rural and unincorporated areas. The firm of McDougall & Ludgate in Hamilton Township, Northumberland County (# 54A) was early identified as an industrial leader but until this study neared completion we had never been able to trace its precise location.³⁹ The database showed that there were seven places in Hamilton Township. A check of these against the Lovell's directory identified McDougall & Ludgate's saw mill in Harwood, on Rice Lake, a place with a population of 400.

The place directory can be used to locate known firms and known places within the 1871 census geography. John Riordan, paper manufacturer and Gordon & Mackay, Lybster Cotton Mill, both major enterprises in Merritton, can be quickly identified within Grantham Township CSD # 21A.

As a comprehensive index to three sources of 1870-71, the listing provides a benchmark study of Ontario in deriving precise locations of places at the time. Genealogists and historians may find some of these details of value in tracing the more ephemeral small places. While the notes of name changes are not exhaustive, some other leads may be traced from the sources presented.

Acknowledgements

No acknowledgements would be complete without reference to the work of the nineteenth-century compilers and promoters of directories. John Lovell (?-1893) was clearly a master organizer and publisher. Born in Ireland, he came to Canada in 1820. He became a publisher in Montreal in 1835 and established a reputation for directories, gazetteers, geographies and school books.⁴⁰ The 1871 Directory is a tour de force of information-gathering, accurate clerical work, and presentation, created with none of the aids of the modern office. All modern scholars owe a great debt to the thoroughness of the directory compilers and the unknown office workers in the Post Office who laboured to make sense of the places. We are very grateful to Edward Phelps for lending us a copy of Lovell's Directory for part of this project, and we thank Dun and Bradstreet Canada for granting permission to have a microfilm copy made of the R.G. Dun reference book for January 1871.

Several people have worked on aspects of this project and all deserve appreciation for their efforts. Jane Turner built up the original DBase database from Lovell, the R.G. Dun reference books and the Post Office list. Jane Darch later entered population details from Lovell's directory and latitude and longitude from the Gazetteer. Larry Laliberté used the ATLAS*DRAW software system to check on the accuracy of latitude and longitude reference for each place, county by county.

Brian van Nostrand, in his final year of undergraduate studies in geography, combed the lists for duplicates and established the exact county and township location of places from a very wide range of sources. In the course of this work he became an expert on Ontario place names and was able to distinguish Mongolia (Markham Township, York) from its alternate name of California and to recognise the subtle variations in the location of the hundreds of "Corners" across the province. In his future travels in Ontario, he will always be able to extract new meanings from the road signs. His patience and careful work made a major contribution to this gazetteer.

In a very different age of information technology from that in which John Lovell worked, Elizabeth Bloomfield, the general editor of this series, provided excellent management and clear direction. At all times she kept the team on track, reminding us of the ultimate purpose of the gazetteer. Her command of computerized editing and indexing systems and her insistence on high standards of accuracy are reflected in the clarity and consistency of this report.

Table 2
Geographic Counties and Census Districts in Ontario 1871

ADDINGTON

The Census District (CD) named "Addington" (CD #64) included all but two of the townships in Addington County. In addition, however, all the ten townships of northern Frontenac County were included. Ernestown Township (including Bath Village) and Amherst Island Township were included in Lennox (#63).

ALGOMA (District)

Almost entirely unsurveyed and unsettled in 1871. The boundaries of the territorial district were still somewhat vague and included Manitoulin Island. Four CDs (#87-90) covered the district.

BRANT

Divided into two CDs, 15 and 16. Brantford Township was divided between the two CDs.

BRUCE

Divided into two CDs, #27 and 28.

CARLETON

Divided into two CDs, #77 (Ottawa) and 78. Gloucester and Osgoode Townships were included with Russell (CD#76). The county was re-organized as the Regional Municipality of Ottawa-Carleton in 1969.

DUNDAS

Coincided with CD#71.

DURHAM

Divided into two CDs, #50 and 51. The geographic county was abolished in 1974 with the formation of regional government. Manvers Township was transferred to Victoria county, Cavan Township to Peterborough and Hope Township to Northumberland.

ELGIN

Divided into two CDs, #5 and 6.

ESSEX

Coincided with CD #1.

FRONTENAC

Divided into two CDs, #65 and 66 (Kingston). All the ten northern townships were included with Addington (CD#64).

GLENGARRY

Coincided with CD#74.

GRENVILLE

Divided into two CDs #69 and 70 (which also included part of north Leeds County).

GREY

Divided into two CDs #36 and 37. Melancthon Township was transferred to the new county of Dufferin in 1881.

HALDIMAND

Divided into two CDs #17 and 18 (Monck, which also included parts of Lincoln and Welland). The county became part of the Regional Municipality of Haldimand-Norfolk in 1974.

HALTON

Coincided with CD #38. In the 1960s the growth of Burlington resulted in the annexation of the southern part of Flamborough East Township. The internal areas of the county were reorganized in 1974 with the establishment of regional government.

HASTINGS

Divided into three CDs #60, 61, and 62.

HURON

Divided into two CDs #25 and 26.

KENT

Divided into two CDs #2 and 3 (Bothwell, which also included part of Lambton).

LAMBTON

Divided into two CDs #3 and 4. Sombra, Dawn and Euphemia Townships were included with part of east Kent in Bothwell CD.

LANARK

Divided into two CDs #79 and 80.

LEEDS

Divided into three CDs #67, 68 and 70 (including part of north Grenville).

LENNOX

Coincided with CD #63 (together with two townships from Addington).

LINCOLN

Divided into three CDs #20, 21 and part 18 (Monck, including parts of Welland and Haldimand). The internal areas of the county were totally modified by regional government in 1970.

MIDDLESEX

Divided into four CDs #7, 8, 9 and 10 (London).

MUSKOKA (District)

With the exception of one township in the north east the District created in 1868 coincided with CD #85. The internal areas of the district were modified by the creation of the District Municipality in 1971.

NIPISSING (District)

Almost entirely unsurveyed and unsettled in 1871. The boundaries of the territorial district were still vague. Two CDs #83 and 84 covered the district and included part of north east Parry Sound.

NORFOLK

Divided into two CDs #11 and 12. The county became part of the Regional Municipality of Haldimand-Norfolk in 1974.

NORTHUMBERLAND

Divided into two CDs #54 and 55. When the Durham Regional Municipality was created in 1974, the Township of Hope was transferred from Durham, While South Monaghan was transferred to Peterborough.

ONTARIO

Divided into two CDs #48 and 49. The county disappeared in 1974 when the Regional Municipality of Durham was constituted. Rama and Mara townships were transferred to Simcoe.

OXFORD

Divided into two CDs #13 and 14. The internal areas were reorganized in 1975.

PARRY SOUND (District)

The area was still being surveyed in 1871 and only limited settlement had taken place. Except for the north eastern part, the district area generally coincided with CD #86.

PEEL

Divided into two CDs #39 and 40 (Cardwell which included part of Simcoe). The internal areas were reorganized in 1974 with regional government.

PERTH

Divided into two CDs #29 and 30.

PETERBOROUGH

Divided into three CDs 56, 57 and 58. With the formation of the provisional county of Haliburton in 1874, twelve townships from the northern part of Peterborough were transferred (Snowdon, Glamorgan, Monmouth, Cardiff, Minden, Dysart, Dudley, Harcourt, Stanhope, Guilford, Harburn and Bruton). In 1974 the Townships of Cavan (Durham) and South Monaghan (Northumberland) were added to Peterborough.

PRESCOTT

Coincided with CD #75.

PRINCE EDWARD

Coincided with CD #59.

RENFREW

Divided into two CDs #81 and 82. Further townships were added to Renfrew in the later 1870s.

RUSSELL

Coincided with CD #76 (which also included two townships of Carleton). Cumberland Township was transferred to the Ottawa-Carleton Regional Municipality in 1969.

SIMCOE

Divided into three CDs #40, 41 and 42. CD 40 (Cardwell), also included two townships of Peel. Mono and Mulmur Townships were transferred to the new county of Dufferin in 1881. Washago in North Orillia Township was transferred at some time to Rama Township in Ontario. Rama and Mara Townships were added from Ontario in 1974, when the county was abolished.

STORMONT

Divided into two CDs #73 and 74.

VICTORIA

Divided into two CDs #52 and 53. Three townships (Lutterworth, Anson and Hindon) were transferred to the new provisional county of Haliburton in 1874. Manvers Township was added in 1974 when Durham County was abolished.

WATERLOO

Divided into two CDs #31 and 32. Waterloo Township was divided between the two CDs. The internal areas were reorganized in 1973 with regional government. Part of Beverly Township (Wentworth) was added at this time.

WELLAND

Divided into two CDs #18 and 19. CD 18 (Monck) also included parts of Haldimand and Lincoln. The internal areas were reorganized in 1970 with regional government.

WELLINGTON

Divided into three CDs #33, 34 and 35. The Town of Orangeville and the Townships of Amaranth and East Garafraxa were transferred to the new county of Dufferin in 1881.

WENTWORTH

Divided into three CDs #22, 23 and 24 (Hamilton). The internal areas were reorganized in 1974 with regional government.

YORK

Divided into five CDs #43, 44 and 45 (46 and 47 included Toronto). The southern townships were transferred to the new Metropolitan Municipality of Toronto in 1954 and all other internal areas were reorganized in 1971 with regional government.
